What does Municipal Government do for you?

After researching various election statistics, I was able to determine that "lack of interest in municipal affairs" was one of the top five reasons that kept eligible electors from voting in 2006. So I asked myself: why should people have a vested interest in municipal politics? What does the municipality do for me?

Municipalities are responsible for the roads we drive on, parks and trails we enjoy, providing fire services to ensure our safety and collecting the waste and recycling that we produce each week. Municipal politicians are also a key factor in shaping the environment that we see each day. They make critical, and sometimes controversial, decisions concerning issues such as the location of development, facilities and infrastructure.

Through electing local representatives, we get a say in how our tax dollars are spent. We are all highly impacted by the decisions made by our municipal government. So take the opportunity, go to the polls on October 25th to have your say on these, and other important issues.
